FOREWORD

The Annual Autumn Exhibition this year has attracted a greater number of exhibitors, with a wider variety of work than in recent years. You will find that many of the paintings represent the more contemporary conception of art. We are anxious to introduce you to the work of these young New Zealand artists, and while you may perhaps find some of them difficult to follow, we think you will find many of them exciting, colourful, and vigorous.

During the last hundred years, the great French painters Cezanne, Gauguin, Renoir, and later the English painters and sculptors Sutherland, Nash, and Henry Moore, to mention a few, have broken away from the traditional methods of expression, and the work of artists has become more individual. To many of the foremost thinkers today it is only when art is individual, that it is acceptable as art.

The mere realistic reproduction of our surroundings is no longer recognised as an artistic achievement unless the essential characteristic of the surroundings has been absorbed by the artist and interpreted through his individual feelings and temperament. Consequently we cannot compare one artist's work with another. The viewer has to see and judge for himself each artist's work independantly with no other guidance but his own taste and knowledge.

We ask you to bear this in mind when looking at pictures which may not at first be readily acceptable. New ideas in art take time and tolerance before they can be appreciated and enjoyed, but that appreciation and enjoyment can be enriching and stimulating experiences.
